Advice on References and Condition

Quotations of catalogue numbers and values are taken from Stanley Gibbons catalogues, and other catalogues named in the text, current at the time of lotting. This auction contains many items that are unique or of exceptional rarity. It should be noted that all philatelic items are graded and described in relation to their condition as normally found. Covers in particular should be expected to have minor imperfections consistent with their age and passage through the postal system and only significant faults will be described. The condition of covers will not be considered as grounds for return.

The illustration of a lot in the catalogue or on the internet is deemed to form part of its description and lots may not be rejected on the grounds of imperfections that are visible clearly from the illustration.

EDITORIAL

There's a question for you at the end of this editorial, but before we get to it, let's spend a little time on the stamps of King George VI. The 2018 SG Concise Catalogue, which is getting less concise each year, has a mere four pages out of 470 for the entire reign, less than 1%, so one might think there's not much to collect (but then King Edward VIII only gets half a page, yet we can fill albums with material).

Of particular interest to me are the wartime years and the changes involved. The stamps themselves did not see much of a change, other than being printed in pale or light colours. These were introduced in 1941 as a wartime measure to save paper and ink.

the ones that tend to oxidise rather unpleasantly. The 5s booklets were next, changing from glazed buff covers to unglazed brown covers in February 1943. A new cover design was introduced in August 1943 with the GPO emblem moved to the top centre. These booklets were no longer numbered as commercial adverts were discontinued and replaced by wartime Post Office notices. From September 1944 all interleaves were discontinued. Commercial adverts and interleaves would not come back until 1953. Shown here are some of the wartime Post Office notices, the first design is attributed to Oscar Berger (the cartoonist, not the President of Guatemala). I enjoy collecting them; there are variations in the designs and in the paper.

The changes to rolls are more complex, and not as well documented. During the reign, broadly speaking the leader papers went through four styles: pre-war bright colours on white, dull colours on buff, uncoloured buff, and post-war bright colours on white (perforated). What makes this

A LOOKING-GLASS FOR LONDON.—No. VIII.

EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL COMMUNICATION.

[Fleet Street—Procession of Mail Coaches on the King's Birth day.]

Engraved by Thomas Rowlandson. Printed by W. G. Smith, 15, Abchurch Lane, London.

ONE of the most interesting chapters in the history of our civilization and progress as a nation is afforded by the various means of intercourse and communication in use at different periods. The time is so recent when roads were rough and perilous—when vehicles for travelling were clumsy, unusual, and expensive affairs,—when a journey any little distance from home was a serious and important event,—that in looking back at what our grandfathers endured, and comparing it with what we now enjoy, we cannot but wonder at the rapidity and completeness of the alteration. Scott's picture of the journey of Jeanie Deans, on foot, from Edinburgh to London, in the reign of George II., gives us an idea of what was then the actual state of things. He exhibits his single-minded and resolute heroine pursuing her way from one county to another as if she were passing through different and distinct nations,—her person and appearance occasionally a wonder or a laughing-stock, and, he adds, with genuine Scotch feeling, her dialect at times mocked in dialects infinitely more barbarous.

We have already given in the 'Penny Magazine' * In Volume the Third there are some statements respecting the number of inns two centuries ago in London—the history of VOL. VI.

various particulars respecting the state of travelling and communication in England at former periods. We need not, therefore, at present, go over similar ground. But, without looking farther back than the beginning of the nineteenth century, it may be remarked, that the thirty-six years that have elapsed present us with some striking contrasts. Who now shrinks from travelling in a stage-coach by night, from the fear of its being stopped and robbed on the highway? In 1811, it was stated before a committee of the House of Commons that the only coaches which were then considered safe to travel in by night were the mails, the well-armed guard being regarded as a protection. Cabriolets and omnibuses, those useful vehicles that now throng our streets, seem, from their numbers, as if they had been in use for a long period—a century at least. Yet the cabriolets were only introduced in 1820, the omnibuses in 1830. In that short interval they have assisted in effecting great changes. They have contributed power-coaches and travelling on the continent a hundred years ago,—and the history of the Post Office, with an account of the origin and history of our present mail-system. In Volume the Fourth a variety of particulars are introduced, illustrative of travelling in England in the seventeenth century.
